Research and Presentation

Independent Study, Mississippi State University – Starkville, MS JAN – APR 2011

- Advisor: Dr. Daniel Carruth
- Co-Authors: Dr. Teena Garrison & Dr. Carrick Williams
- Effects of Monochromatic and Non-monochromatic Natural Scenes on Reaction Time and Accuracy in Visual Search
- Examined effects of reduced contrast, monochromatic appearance, and reduced saliency caused by night vision devices (NVDs) on reaction time and accuracy rates for visual search in natural scenes. The effect of lighting conditions on response times suggested it may take longer to detect the designated target under simulated night vision conditions than under normal lighting conditions when the target was present. Target effect indicated specific features of target determined impact of NVD's visual display.
- Poster presented at the Mississippi State University Spring Undergraduate Research Symposium, Starkville, MS, April 21, 2011.
- 1st place poster presentation in the category of Engineering (category chosen by symposium).
